A noon meeting today will help launch a program providing summer internships in Washington for Brown and Pembroke students.

Lyman B. Kirkpatrick, professor of political science, will chair the faculty committee meeting today to discuss the establishment of a program to help students get summer positions with Congressmen and Federal agencies.

The faculty committee, formed with Cammarian Club impetus, also includes Gordon R. Dewart, associate dean of the college, Elmer E. Cornwell, Jr., professor and head of the political science department, and Erwin C. Hargrove, assistant professor of political science.

Peter P. Broderick '66, president of the Cammarian Club, described the aims of the program as threefold:

- providing information about jobs available and recommended application procedures,
- securing positions guaranteed to recommended Brown students and nominating students for these positions.
- making it feasible for certain students to work as interns through limited financial assistance.

In early February, there will be an informational meeting for interested students.

In addition to the faculty committee, others assisting in the initiation of the program will be Daniel W. Earle, director of development, Paul F. Mackesey, alumni executive officer, Nancy A. Simons, executive secretary of the University Christian Association, Hope R. Brothers, placement officer, and Lloyd W. Cornell, Jr., director of financial aid.

EXPECTATION

Mr. Broderick said that 30 positions would be a good start for the program, which he hopes will eventually be as successful as Yale's. Eighty-five Yale students worked in Washington last summer.

January 26 and 27, Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Broderick will go to Washington. At a reception sponsored by Thomas G. Corcoran '22, presidential adviser for alumni in Federal positions or working as lawyers in the Washington area, they hope to gain support in securing positions. They will also appoint a committee to direct-
